The first quarter of 2025 presented a challenging landscape for global equity markets, marked by persistent economic uncertainties and geopolitical tensions. Inflationary pressures, though easing, continued to influence monetary policies worldwide. The ongoing deglobalisation trend and shifting trade dynamics added complexity to the investment environment. Amidst this turbulence, the Positive Change Fund delivered negative returns. We maintain our conviction in the Target Fund's positioning to address critical global challenges that transcend short-term market fluctuations. The companies in the Target Fund are at the forefront of transformative solutions in areas such as healthcare, financial inclusion, and environmental sustainability – themes we believe will drive long-term value creation and positive societal impact.

MercadoLibre, Alnylam and SEA Ltd were the top contributors to performance. MercadoLibre is the leading ecommerce and fintech company in Latin America. The company's robust performance reflects its strong market position and continued growth in key segments. Its fintech arm, Mercado Pago, has shown impressive user acquisition and engagement metrics, while its core ecommerce business continues to benefit from increasing penetration rates across the region.

Alnylam's share price growth was driven by the FDA approval of its cardiovascular drug Amvuttra. This development underscores Alnylam's leadership in RNA interference therapeutics, a revolutionary approach to treating genetic disorders. The company's pipeline continues to show promise, with potential applications across a range of diseases.

Sea Limited showed strong growth across its three core business segments. Shopee, Sea's e-commerce platform, achieved 28% GMV growth while improving profitability in both Asian and Brazilian markets. Its digital financial services division also showed exceptional strength, with its loan book expanding over 60% year-on-year. Looking ahead, SEA is well-positioned to continue outperforming due to its expanding user base, increasing monetisation opportunities, and potential for further market penetration in both ecommerce and financial services across Southeast Asia's rapidly digitalising economies.

Among the biggest detractors from performance during the quarter were Illumina, TSMC and Moderna.

Illumina, a leader in DNA sequencing technology, faced challenges this quarter due to regulatory headwinds and slower-than-expected adoption of its high-throughput sequencing systems. Despite these short-term setbacks, we maintain our conviction in Illumina's long-term potential. The company's technologies are fundamental to advancing personalised medicine and genetic research, areas we believe will drive significant healthcare improvements in the coming decades.

TSMC, the world's largest semiconductor foundry, saw its performance detract due to concerns over global chip demand and geopolitical tensions. However, we believe TSMC's technological leadership and crucial role in the global semiconductor supply chain position it well for long-term growth. Furthermore, the company's commitment to advancing chip manufacturing technology and the increasing importance of semiconductors make it one of the key enablers of various technological advancements.

Moderna experienced a challenging financial year, with revenues significantly lower than the previous year. The decline in COVID-19 vaccine sales and the RSV vaccine's struggles against established competitors, combined with recent FDA leadership changes, have further unsettled investor confidence. With its validated mRNA platform demonstrating a significantly higher success rate than traditional drug development approaches, we believe Moderna is well-positioned to create long-term value through its technological advantages in multiple therapeutic areas.
