While US tariff rates on India are eye-catching, we see this as an invitation to negotiate. Putting the economic implications into context, India's overall goods exports to the US are valued at approximately 2% of Indian gross domestic product (GDP). Within MSCI India's top 30 listed stock universe, no stock faces a material direct hit from US tariffs in our view, and the impact is expected to be confined to a handful of smaller-cap auto ancillary, chemical, and textile exporters. India, in turn, has resisted full market access for US dairy and agricultural products, driven by employment sensitivities in rural India. We do not expect this stance to change.

In the domestic economy, there has been a visible shift in government policy focus towards reviving growth, with active steps taken to ease liquidity conditions. Measures such as interest rate cuts and tax reductions underscore the government's strong commitment to reigniting economic momentum. In particular, the revised goods and services tax (GST) rates represent a clear focus on providing relief to middle class Indians and boosting broader domestic consumption. Not only is the structure simpler, but it is also more modern – with items like small cars, beauty products, and packaged food no longer taxed as “luxury” goods.

We remain focused on sustainable compounders, clean balance sheets, and businesses with pricing power. Fundamentally, India remains on a strong, long-term growth path and we believe once the near-term headwinds start to ease, then the market should regain more positive momentum, especially with valuations at more attractive levels.
